GANGING UP FOR PROGRESS

ROCC Computers has just celebrated its fifth anniversary as a profitable independent British computer company.

The photograph above shows the original "gang of four", who led the buy out of ROCC from Rediffusion Computers in 1984 at a celebratory dinner

All four are still on ROCC's board. They are, from left, Keith Bankes, customer services director; Derek Strath, financial director; Norman Watling, systems design and integration director, and Mike Aldrich, chairman.

"ROCC Computers has done very well," says Mr Aldrich. "In the five years since our independence from Rediffusion, ROCC has gone from strength to strength, and we are well placed for further growth in the 1990s."

ROCC Computers is a leading British supplier of data capture and videotex computer systems as well as local government applications, their headquarters are in Crawley and sales and service branches across the country.

Data processing manager Jim Laing recently clocked up 10 years service at Crawley-based ROCC Computers. In the picture on the right he is seen receiving from financial director Derek Strath a Cross gold ballpoint and pencil set and a long service certificate.

Mr Laing has been a resident of East Grinstead for nine years.
